1998 Bias Violence

in Arkansas

Dee Dee Green

his edition of Transformation includes events of violence that occurred in the state of Arkansas in 1998 (look for the 1999 Log to be published this Spring). Some of these events claim heinous, yet familiar circumstances such as the murders of women by an intimate partner or spouse. Others mark a not-so-familiar trend profiling white youth as perpetrators in large scale school violence.

In April 1995, we began monitoring the murders of youth across the state of Arkansas. Of the 38 murders logged in 1995, 27 of the young people reportedly died as the result of street violence. In 1998, 14 of 23 (61%) murders were committed by an acquaintance or a relative of the victim. Our society has managed to use violence as an oppressive tool, teaching our youth that it is easier to eliminate what is perceived to be the problem rather than identifying the source of conflict and working toward peaceful resolution. These numbers are a reflection of the patterns of violence that impede our progress toward communal and universal peace for all individuals regardless of race, age, sex, religion, sexual orientation and socio-economic status.

Synopsis

In 1998, we recorded murders of 45 women including Westside Middle School teacher Shannon Wright, 32, who was killed, along with four female students, after two male students opened fire on the campus as the result of an alleged breakup between the older child and his seventh-grade girlfriend. The day after the Westside Middle School shooting, Misty Erwin, 20, was killed by her boyfriend, Clay Smith, who also killed her two children, her cousin and a babysitter. Although these were not all domestic murders, the motivation for these crimes are an indication of our society's devaluation of human life, especially the lives of women and children. The abhorrent acts speak to the images of hate and violence that pervade our society and shape the values and standards of our youth. The difference in media coverage of these crimes also reflects our society's acceptance of domestic violence as ordinary, whereas violence committed by white youth is seen as extraordinary.

Of the murders of women recorded, 31 of the 45 victims (69%) were killed by an acquaintance, relative, spouse (ex-) or boyfriend (ex-). 51% of the murders were committed by gunfire. 11% of the perpetrators shot and killed themselves. 9% killed children during the assault of the women. 23 murders of youth were recorded including three suicides.

1998 Bias Violence in Arkansas

61% of murdered youth were killed by an acquaintance or blood relative. 13% of these youth committed suicide. 30% of the murders involved multiple homicides. 83% of the murders were executed by gunfire. Two deaths of infant children, a newborn and a 3-month-old, were recorded. Both were killed by a parent.

Other Activities in Arkansas

There are several other incidents of bias violence and discrimination that Watchcare monitors and logs, such as hate group activity, elder abuse, violence against people with disabilities, lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered individuals and religious minorities to name a few. Some of these occurrences do not receive adequate attention from the community and media. Watchcare works to counter this inadequacy by monitoring, documenting and responding to any event significant to senseless hate-based violence.

The 1998 Log reports four incidents of violence against aging persons, one of which died after being robbed, raped and bludgeoned to death. Three acts of violence against people with disabilities are listed in the Log, including two institutionalized adults and one homeless victim. Discriminatory acts against LGBT persons are recorded, one being the suicide of a male whose name and address appeared in the Arkansas-Democrat Gazette after being arrested on sex-related misdemeanor charges. Eight episodes of racism and racist violence are published in addition to a national report citing 670 church burnings tracked by the national task force since 1995. Six reports of local hate group activity appear in the Log. Additional information on the investigation of the Aryan Republic Army and Chevie Kehoe is included. Kehoe is charged in the 1996 murders of

One out of two women in the state of Arkansas will at some point in her life experience domestic battery.

William Mueller, 53, his wife, Nancy, 28, and her 8-year-old daughter, Sarah Powell near Russellville, in order to fund a white republic in the Pacific Northwest. Two reports of possible satanic activity are listed, one of which involves cruel attacks on ten horses in Barling, Arkansas. One incident of antiabortion violence appears in the edition of Transformation.

Final Words

It is difficult to understand the extent to which violence has moved from the status of antisocial behavior to a glamorized solution to any given situation. It is even more difficult to fathom the enormous influence violence has over interpersonal relationships. According to statistics, every nine to fifteen seconds a woman in this country is abused by an intimate partner or spouse. One out of two women in the state of Arkansas will at some point in her life experience domestic battery. Children killing classmates. parents killing children, adults elderly parents, abusing Christians growing intolerant of Jews, straight people bashing gay people and able-bodied individuals mistreating disabled individuals are indications that such aberrant behavior has become socially and morally acceptable.

The Women's Project and its constituency have worked toward since 1981 elimination of racism and sexism. The connection between these social constructions and others force us to address all issues of bias-based violence in The Women's Arkansas. Watchcare Network continues to proactively advocate for peace, educate and organize communities around issues of hate-induced violence. In addition to community activism, the Network publishes this annual Log in order to inform and encourage movement toward social change.

About the Women's Watchcare Network Log

The Log is published annually as documentation of violence against Arkansans and is based on gender, race, ethnicity, national origin, age, disability, religion, sexual orientation and gender identity, as well as activities of organized hate groups in Arkansas. We document in order to serve as witnesses to the ongoing violence against people who are perceived as different, to increase community awareness of the epidemic prevalence of violence, and to provide supporting information to those working for social change, including national anti-violence projects, local domestic violence advocates. faith communities, legislators, and others.

Our log contains only information that is verifiable by named sources. We have chosen this method to debate over the truthfulness of our information. This precludes many sources and mandates that the major sources of information for the log are newspapers and literature published by hate groups. Oftentimes victims of hate crimes do not wish to have their accounts divulged for fear of further violence.

The Women's Watchcare Network is not an undercover network. We operate with the assumption that our work is being monitored by others.

All incidents are listed by the date of the first report to appear in the media. The newspaper cited most often is the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette, which is listed as ADG.

Racist Violence

February 19, Conway

Tammy Stanley, University of Central Arkansas secretary, was fired after a fight with an associate professor, Dr. Barbara Holmes. According to reports, the confrontation occurred when Dr. Holmes asked Stanley, a department secretary, to come to her office to tell her a travel request form had been sent back to the department because it did not contain all the necessary information. Accounts then vary, but both parties agree that Ms. Stanley called Dr. Holmes names, including "n*r". Dr. Holmes also claims that Stanley shoved her, injuring her knees.

Stanley, who has worked for the university for four years, received a letter of termination citing her "insubordination and conduct reflecting unfavorably upon the reputation of the university."

Stanley said she intends to file a grievance over the firing, which she claims was racially motivated. She said she feels department chair Dr. David Skotko believed Dr. Holmes' version of the events because Dr. Holmes is black and Stanley is white. "He was afraid to punish

her. He's scared she'll end up filing a discrimination lawsuit against him."

A $1,000 reward is being offered by the chancellor of the University of Arkansas for information about a vandal who spray-painted "I love n*rs" on the outside of the Sigma Chi fraternity. The members of the fraternity awoke on Feb. 13 to find several derogatory messages spray-painted on their house and several cars.

Police believe the vandal or vandals may have acted in retaliation for a fight one of the fraternity members got into at a nightclub on Feb. 12.

Shirley residents, Michell Dunn, 22, and Robert Treece, 25, pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court to the 1995 burning of an interracial church run by the Universal Church of God in Shirley, Arkansas. The two arsonists admitted that they were motivated to intimidate black church members by conspiring to burn the mobile home used by the church as a Christian school.

A third man, Jerry Jones, 25, of Shirley pleaded guilty to a conspiracy charge after driving Treece to the scene to burn the church building.

After being sentenced to 97 months in prison, Treece requested that he serve his term in an area away from blacks who know the nature of his crime. He reported being threatened by some blacks in the Pulaski County jail, including an inmate "with a bad reputation." "We don't have any all-white prisons," said U.S. District Judge Henry Woods. However, the judge agreed to alert the prison system of Treece's request.

All three of the conspirators were handed the minimum sentences allowable under federal sentencing guidelines.

January 7, Greenbrier

Federal authorities are investigating an area cross-burning near Greenbrier as a possible hate crime. The incident was reported to the Faulkner County Sheriff's Office on November 21, 1998, when Angela Maxfield, a black resident west of Wooster, discovered the cross burning in her front yard.

Assistant U.S. District Attorney Michael Johnson stated, "We are investigating it...and have been since it was brought to our attention shortly after the incident. We typically stay with these cases until we solve them." He was unable to release information concerning the investigation, but guaranteed that the federal agency had every intention of reaching some resolution despite the length of the investigation.

A U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's lawsuit claims that the Cajun Company's Caucasian foreman referred to its African-American employees as "nrs." The lawsuit alleges the African-American employees were treated more harshly than others and they were discharged or forced to quit because of their race. The suit is seeking lost wages with interest, compensatory damages for emotional and psychological harm, and punitive damages.

In late January, the EEOC filed another lawsuit claiming female employees at Odom Antennas Inc. of Beebe had been subjected to sexual harassment and possible retaliation following their complaints about the alleged unlawful practices. The lawsuit seeks lost wages with interest, compensatory damages for emotional and psychological harm as well as punitive damages.

Both lawsuits were filed in the Federal District Court system in Arkansas.

October 23, Washington (National)

Statistics show that onefourth of the nation's church burnings are made up of black churches. Bill Lann Lee, acting assistant attorney general, said, "Right now we have found no evidence of a national conspiracy based on racial bias or antireligious motives. In some cases, clusters of church attacks revealed 'local coordination' among arsonists."

The national task force formed to track attacks on churches has been investigating church fires since 1995. The task force reported that of the 670 suspicious church fires, bombings or attempted bombings since 1995 show that 225 targeted black churches; 297 churches were burned in 1996, 119 of them were black. In 1997, the task force tallied 53 attacks on black churches and 155 on others. Eight months into 1998, 28 of the 114 churches targeted were black.

Most of the fires remained unsolved, however 308 people have been arrested in church attacks. Looking at attacks on black churches, 68 whites, 37 blacks, and one Hispanic have been arrested.

January 6, Pulaski County

The body of Kimberly Fudge, 35, was found in a shallow grave in the southern part of the county by a man walking through the woods. She had been stabbed several times in the chest.

Fudge's mother, Helen Wade, 68, reported her daughter missing to the North Little Rock police. According to the report, Kimberly Fudge had not been seen since Dec. 27.

Wade told police that Kimberly Fudge and her husband, James Charles Fudge, 33, fought Dec. 26 and that he allegedly cut his wife on the face with a knife and choked her. James Fudge threatened to kill Kimberly during the Dec. 26 encounter, according to Wade. Kimberly Fudge refused to call police and report the attack, according to her mother.

Gerald Stell, 37, apparently drove up to the house just after Goodrich started her car to go to work. Before she could flee into the house, Stell shot her. Stell then stood over Goodrich and shot himself in the chest.

Larry Wayne Barnes, 28, pleaded innocent to a charge of first-degree murder in the shooting death of his ex-wife, Debra Settles O'Neal, 36, outside her home on January 20. He was ordered held in the Pulaski County jail on $200,000 bond.

O'Neal's 15-year-old son, Grady O'Neal, told deputies that his mother had recently divorced Barnes but Barnes came to the house, told O'Neal he wanted to resume the relationship, "would not take 'no' for an answer" and refused to leave.

Mother and son went inside the house and locked the doors. Debra O'Neal tried to call sheriff's deputies, but Barnes cut the telephone line, deputies said.

Grady O'Neal told deputies that he and his mother went back outside where Barnes was waiting. While Grady O'Neal was walking to a neighbor's home to call the sheriff's office, Barnes allegedly fired three or four shots and Debra Barnes fell with wounds in her back and right hand. Barnes then ran to his pickup and fled.

Deputies found O'Neal lying in the street, conscious but unresponsive. She was flown by helicopter to Baptist Medical Center.

Barnes was stopped and arrested on single counts of first-degree domestic battery and for being a felon in possession of a firearm. The battery charge was changed to first-degree murder when O'Neal died later in the evening. Barnes was later convicted of capital murder and sentenced to life in prison without parole.

Clay King Smith, 27, was charged with five counts of capital murder for the shooting deaths of Misty Erwin, 20; her cousin, Shelly Sorg, 24; Sorg's children, Taylor Nicole Sorg, 3, and Sean Michael Sorg, 5; and Samantha Rhodes, 12. Samantha Rhodes, the baby-sitter, was also beaten in the face as well as shot. All had been shot with a small-caliber weapon.

James Erwin, Misty Erwin's uncle, said Smith had a history of domestic violence with Misty. He said Smith had been arrested recently and threatened to kill Misty Erwin when he got out of jail.

Prosecuting Attorney
Betty Dickey said that Smith is unemployed and is addicted to methamphetamine. She said deputies were called to the residence two days before the murders for "a minor incident," possibly involving abuse, but
"apparently she was not injured seriously and didn't want him prosecuted."

"This is a classic case of domestic violence," Dickey said.

Smith was found guilty and sentenced to death.

Vivian Ferguson, 38, was found dead of stab wounds in the bathroom of an apartment after police received a 911 call reporting a suicide. Police found a butter knife in Ferguson's hand. Tracy M. Wright, 27, Ferguson's boyfriend, allegedly told police that Ferguson had stabbed herself with that knife.

Investigators at the state Crime Laboratory found Wright's wounds were not consistent with the butter knife. They found she had been stabbed with a sharp, double-edged knife like a dagger. The knife was recovered about a month after Ferguson's death.

Police suspect that Ferguson and Wright fought after she kicked or tipped over a bucket of gasoline and spilled it on the floor. Lt. Tim Helder said Wright allegedly had been "huffing" or inhaling gasoline fumes to become intoxicated.

Police said Wright stabbed Ferguson during the fight, then walked six blocks to his sister's house to tell her that Ferguson was dead. The two went back to the apartment, then Wright's sister call 911 and reported a suicide. Police believe the sister, Angelita Blackburn, thought that Ferguson had indeed killed herself. She has not been charged.

Wright was held in the Washington County jail on a first-degree murder charge. He was convicted of first-degree murder and sentenced to 40 years in the Department of Correction.

Paul Smith, 36, was arrested for the beating death of his ex-girlfriend, Emma Goodman, 47. Goodman's grandson, Marcus Thomas, 11, told police and family members that Smith cut phone and power lines to the house, kicked in the front door, and came inside against his grandmother's orders.

When Goodman, clutching Marcus and his 3-year-old sister, Kayla Goodman, to her sides, told Smith to leave, Smith told her to let go of the children or he would cut off her hands. Smith then allegedly yanked a crystal doorknob from the kitchen door and attacked Goodman.

Marcus said Smith beat Goodman with the doorknob and stabbed her with its metal shank twice in the chest. Smith allegedly slammed Goodman's head against a wall, choked her and dragged her up and down the staircase.

When the children tried to leave the house, Smith allegedly threatened to stab them.

The children's mother, Phyllis Goodman, 27, found them and her mother the next morning. The 3-year-old had spent the night sleeping alongside Goodman's body on the sofa. Family members said that Smith had assaulted Goodman in the past.

The body of Rhonda Combs, 23, was driven to the Booneville Police Department by her boyfriend. The man said Combs' ex-husband, Timothy Buffington, 32, had asked them to drive him to a bridge so he could hide some property before leaving on a trip. Once at the bridge, Buffington allegedly unwrapped a rifle from a blanket and shot through the truck's back window, hitting Combs once in the head. The boyfriend drove off before Buffington could reload. Buffington also allegedly claimed that he was on the way to kill his children. Police placed the children and their grandmother into protective custody while tracking Timothy Buffington to the field where Combs had been killed.

Police found Buffington standing in the field holding a rifle over his head and yelling for the officers to "come and get him." After a brief negotiation, Buffington dropped the rifle and was taken into custody.

Buffington pleaded innocent to the charge of capital murder and is being held in the Logan County jail. The motive in the shooting was Buffington's fear that Combs would try to take away his joint custody of their children. The couple had divorced 18 months ago and were in a custody battle over their 8-year-old daughter and 6-year-old son.

A black Mazda 626 LX containing three young men pulled up next to a car with a rainbow on it. The young man on the passenger side asked the driver of the stickered car, "What does the rainbow on the back of your car stand for?" She replied, "Gay rights." The young man then started screaming "F...ing fa..ot" at her. The car he was riding in seemed to swerve toward her car and then speeded up. The victim made note of their Arkansas license plate: 085 BOK.

Then as the victim's car approached Rolling Hills, the harassers' car slowed down, waited for her to come alongside, and then the young man screamed "g..d... fu.." and other obscenities and produced a camera, saying he wanted a picture of a gay. This kept up until they approached the Mall.

The police were called and said the young men had not broken any laws as they hadn't overtly threatened the victim. Three stables along Arkansas 59 were the scenes for knife attacks on 10 horses, nine critically injured, one dead. Each of the horses was stabbed in the neck in what Barling Police Officer Larry Croom called "very cruel, hard to explain."

Croom owns two of the horses wounded in the attack and he owned the quarter horse that died from an attack before Thanksgiving. His stable is one of the three that were involved in the attack along Arkansas 59. Authorities suspected that the attack on Croom's quarterhorse was an act of retaliation against the police department or Croom, but Police Chief Myron LaMore stated that this attack "puts a whole different light on it."

The attack drew national attention and there was some speculation that occult or satanic activity may have been involved. Authorities uncovered a shrine in Crawford County that includes carvings and effigies of horses that have been stabbed, but they have found nothing to link it to the Barling attacks.

Police spokesperson Victoria Harris described an eight-foot-tall cross with etchings of a horse's head with a knife sticking out of the forehead, tears flowing from its eyes and a trail of hoof prints. Two candles were attached to the upright post of the cross. An effigy of a horse made of pine needles with a splinter stuck in its chest and a noose around its neck was hanging from the cross.

Activities of White Supremacist Groups

January 26, Harrison

The Knights of the Ku Klux Klan's participation in the state's Adopt a Highway program will come to an end because it failed to renew its application. The Klan's sign had been located on U.S. 65 about 12 miles south of Branson, Mo.

"That's news to me," said Nathan Robb, son of Thom Robb, national director of the Klan. Robb said that in the four years since the Klan has been cleaning up its stretch of U.S. 65, a dozen signs announcing that fact have been stolen or vandalized.

Residents of the State Line RV Park, on whose property the southbound sign was posted, say it created a traffic hazard and led to more littering. ADG: 1/26

March 23, Spokane, WA

Guns used in some of the 22 robberies that investigators attribute to the Aryan Republic Army came from Chevie Kehoe and his father, Kirby Kehoe.

Chevie Kehoe and two co-defendants, Faron Lovelace and Danny Lee, are accused in a federal racketeering indictment in Arkansas of forming a group called the Aryan People's Republic. Kehoe and Lee are also charged in the robbery and killing of an Arkansas gun dealer and his family in 1996.

The bound bodies of William Mueller, 53, his wife, Nancy, 28, and her 8-year-old daughter, Sarah Powell, were found in Illinois Bayou near Russellville six months later.

Authorities said the Aryan Republic Army hoped to foment a race war and overthrow the government using money obtained in the robberies. Six members have been convicted in bank robberies in Ohio, Iowa, Wisconsin, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas and Kentucky. Investigators believe the robberies netted $250,000.

Anti-Abortion Violence

February 19, Little Rock

James Dawson, 67, of Vilonia, was cited for allegedly claiming he had planted a bomb at the Little Rock Family Planning Services.

Two construction workers who were pouring concrete behind the building told police that Dawson said he'd "planted a bomb on them" about 8:30 a.m.

Agents from the FBI and federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms were called but no bomb was found.

The clinic was the site of a bomb scare last year when a Ryder rental truck that had been rented by another abortion opponent was left parked outside of it. No bomb was found and no charges were filed in that bomb scare, although it is still reportedly under investigation.

Dawson was cited for threatening a fire or bomb, a Class A misdemeanor, and released. If convicted, he could face up to a year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Can You Help?

The Women's Watch-care Network is dependent upon a steady flow of information about incidents of biasmotivated violence and the activities of organized groups of white supremacists, neo-Nazis, and anti-government groups. To gather this information, we read and clip Arkansas newspapers and obtain the statements of victims.

What do we need in order to document violence in Arkansas?

We particularly need clippings from newspapers, other than the Little Rock newspapers, relating to the murders of women and children, violence due to sexual orientation or gender identity, violence against people with disabilities, violence against people because of their religion, and the activities of groups such as the Klan, Aryan Nations and other exclusionist militias. If you are able to send a clipping, please write the name of the newspaper and the date of the article.

If leaflets, pamphlets or flyers are handed to you, put under your windshield wipers, or thrown on your property by groups espousing racist, anti-Semitic, sexist or homophobic philosophies, please send them to us, along with the place you received it (e.g. home, work, grocery store) and the date you received it.

If you are a victim of harassment or violence — or you know someone who is — please call and give us a report of the incident. Your account will not be published without your permission. However, even if we do not publish your report in our annual log, we can use the statistical information to share with other national anti-violence projects, in our efforts to affect public policy and improve services to the victims of hate crimes.

If you would like to volunteer, or if you have some other ideas of ways of combating violence, please call us at the Women's Project:
